Russian Youth Astounds by His Violin Playing

By Sylvester Rawling.

HERE'S a new star in the firmament of violinists. Jascha Heifetz, a Russian, not yet seventeen years old, made a first appearance in America at a recital in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon and fairly dazzled a distinguished audience by his skill. That he will be the rage of the season is certain. That he may come out of it is acknowledged head of his fellow craftsmen is more than probable.

His programme besides the Viennese concerto in D minor in the playing of both of which he showed sterling musicianship and illuminative understanding. For the rest Mr. Heifetz (justifiably) on a first appearance, chose pieces to show what he can do. Among them were Mozart's symphony, Beethoven's "Emperor," Brahms' "Minuet," and Bartók's concerto.
